Gerald Paetsch Academic Advising Award

The DePaul University Gerald Paetsch Advising Award recognizes members of the University community who demonstrate excellence in advising undergraduate and graduate students. The awards are announced to the University community and presented at the annual Academic Convocation each September.

Has an advisor made a difference in your progress toward your educational goals? If an advisor has provided you with outstanding guidance, please nominate her/him for this award!

FAQs

Why this award?
At DePaul, advisors are in different offices and positions as they live out the values of their profession – and the values of the University – in many ways every day. Think about the person at DePaul who has had an impact on making your DePaul experience a success, then make sure she/he is recognized. This kind of recognition follows in the spirit of other DePaul teaching and service awards.

Who can nominate for this award?
Any undergraduate and graduate student, a staff member, or a faculty member can nominate someone for the advising award.

Who is eligible to win?
Any faculty or staff member who has worked at DePaul University for at least one year (and, of course, whom you feel provides excellent advising services).

Who decides the winners?
A selection committee consisting of faculty and staff from at least three different schools/colleges or offices will select the winners from the eligible pool of nominees.

When should I submit my nomination? How do I know if my nomination has really been received?
Nominations are accepted between September 1st and May 31st of each academic year. Each nomination received will receive a confirmation once they have submitted their nomination application.

When will I know the results of my nomination?
Winners will be announced in the summer, and award presentations will occur during the annual Academic Convocation each September.

How and where do I turn in my nomination?
